Charles

Charles- This slender, orange and white fellow has suffered from numerous respiratory problems over the four years that he's been at OAR. He's been examined by vets, received acupuncture, and submitted to countless indignities (like warm wet facial compresses). While his health has improved, he still gets nervous about being held, probably remembering past medications and treatments. Charles does enjoy being petted and stroked. His large, topaz eyes show his contentment. Charles would love to have a quiet home of his own with a pillow, some sunshine, and a kindhearted person.

Martha

Martha is snowy white with gray tabby ears and a ringed tabby tail. Her dense fur is always immaculate. She often appears to be smiling as she basks in the sun, tummy exposed and all four paws in the air. A relative newcomer to O.A.R., she has adapted fairly well to being around so many other cats, though she definitely prefers people. Martha is usually waiting at the top of the stairs for the first volunteer of the day as if to say, "What took you so long?" It's clear that having a person around all the time would give this kitty something to purr about.

Leah

Leah came to OAR about four years ago, the victim of abuse. She had been confined in a large carrier for most of her young life. She was terribly thin and frightened. Even so, her looks were striking, resembling a gray Abyssinian. After intensive efforts by volunteers, Leah learned to love attention...and food. Consequently, she has put on a few pounds (okay, she's chunky) and craves attention to the point that she doesn't want any other cats to get in her way. She reaches out for anyone who passes by with a pleading look and a silky gray paw. If Leah could speak she'd say, "Please be mine, I want someone just for me."

Cedric

Cedric's sleek black coat and bright eyes belie his serious dental problems. In the last two years, he has lost so many of his teeth from gum disease that he has to have soft food every day. It hasn't dampened his spirit though. He is a very lively boy who loudly demands his supper and can't wait to have the paper in his enclosure changed every day, just so that he can burrow underneath it. A lesser cat would have become depressed or irritable, but never Cedric. He's always ready to be everyone's pal and he's more than ready to be someone's special pal.

Penelope

Penelope

Penelope, at OAR for several years, looks like she should be curled up by a cozy hearth. White, with black and dark grey tabby patches, she has the round face and demure expression of the quintessential cat. She keeps herself spotless, washing her face and paws any time the least bit of dirt appears. Penelope was a wonderful mother to her own kittens and even looked after other kittens when her own were gone. Now she would like her own family to look after, one that would provide a warm cushion to curl up on and lots of love.

Jessica Photo

Jessica

Jessica's coat is streaked with cinnamon that matches her eyes. She is a tortoise shell sweetie-pie with the heart of a hunter. Time after time, she stalks and captures her rainbow toy, then parades through the rescue with it, yowling a victory cry. Even after being an OAR resident for three years, Jessica is always playful and affectionate. Her distinctive, inquisitive face looks at everyone as if wondering, "Are you the one?"

Lily Photo

Lily is a classic tortoiseshell with a black fur background streaked with tan, rust and white. Her face is marked with a caramel blaze straight down the center. She came to us with an old injury to her elbow that has given her a permanent limp and a sometimes-cranky attitude as the joint probably aches. Often, she can be found on the table next to the sink, supervising the volunteer washing dishes, her injured leg held up in a queenly manner. It is obvious to those around her that Lily wants attention, but it needs to be brief. She will quickly let loose with a swat when she's tired of being petted. She does noticeably better away from the rescue. Without so many cats, around we think that a quiet home would help with her irritability. Lily needs someone with lots of love to accept her, as she is, temperament and all.

Liza

Liza

Liza was one of several solid black kittens that came to OAR from the same feral colony. She has grown into a beautiful, sleek adult with one oddity. She holds her head at a slight tilt due to ear problems in her youth. This gives her a look of perpetual curiosity. It doesn't seem to cause her any difficulties though. Liza runs and jumps, twists and turns, like any other cat. She is smart, playful, and highly affectionate and would love to have a permanent playmate to call her own

Holly

Holly

Holly and her siblings were trapped and brought to the rescue about four years ago. She was one of the scruffiest, most unattractive kittens ever and definitely the ugly duckling of the group. She was wild with fear and would panic the instant anyone reached into her enclosure. Her long fur was patchy and tangled, her large eyes rheumy. As months went by, her sisters were adopted and Holly gradually calmed down. Today Holly is a majestic black and white tuxedo with a quiet demeanor. She loves to be brushed and stroked. The true happy ending to this fairy tale will come when a patient family gives her the home she deserves.
